

November 2007

Honey of a help to cancer patients

Dealing with cancer can be a bitter experience, but one new therapy may be able to sweeten it up!

A special honey made in Israel is "a very inexpensive, safe and effective" way of helping cancer patients cope with the side effects of chemotherapy treatments, says the prestigious Journal of Medical Oncology.

Developed by a doctor, LifeMel Honey is harvested from bees fed a special diet of therapeutic herbs and other natural ingredients in a controlled, pollution-free environment. Experts recommend taking the honey - which is available through the web site www.lifemelusa.com - twice a day. "I felt stronger." says New York colon cancer sufferer Zisel Goldberg, 50, after using the honey. "The difference was remarkable. I've been able to go back to work."